INTRODUCTION

This Users' Guide provides an explanation of terminology found in the directories that will aid users in understanding status codes. The directories contain cultural resources information from the California Office of Historic Preservation's (OHP) Tracking and Inventory System (OTIS). The resources were submitted to the Office of Historic Preservation through one of its programs (Registration, Review and Compliance, Local Government Surveys, Architectural Review, etc.).

The SHPO, OHP, and by delegation the Information Centers of the CHRIS have both federal and state responsibilities associated with managing and providing access to information about cultural resources in California. Collectively, this information is referred to as the California Historical Resources Information System (CHRIS) Inventory. The subset of the CHRIS Inventory maintained by OHP includes information associated with processes unique to OHP, and the vast majority of these processes are defined in either federal or state law. Different laws use different terms to refer to overlapping components of the OHP inventory, and terms not defined in law are in use as well. This has made communications about the inventory inconsistent and sometimes confusing in their use of terminology. In order to improve the situation, this document presents terms and definitions adopted by OHP that should be used in any correspondence, public information, or policy documents that reference any of the inventory components or outputs defined herein.

The Built Environment Resource Directory (BERD) contains information regarding built environment cultural resources included in the California Office of Historic Preservation's (OHP) Tracking and Inventory System (OTIS) that are deemed non-confidential. It does not include encoded archeological resource attributes.

The Archeological Resources Directory (ARD) contains information regarding cultural resources that are included in the California Office of Historic Preservation's (OHP) Tracking and Inventory System (OTIS) that are deemed confidential. There are sites that aren't archeological/confidential in the ARD, they need to be reviewed before transferring them to the BERD. Access to the data is restricted to prevent theft and damage of cultural resources. Archaeological and Traditional Cultural Property (TCP) locations are generally considered confidential and public access to such information is restricted by laws including:

Section 304 of the National Historic Preservation Act;
Section 9(a) of the Archaeological Resources Protection Act;
Executive Order 13007;
Section 6254.10 of the California State Government Code.

Site data is maintained by the California Historical Resources Information System's (CHRIS) regional information centers listed at https://ohp.parks.ca.gov/?page_id=30331. The forms to gain access and instructions are on OHP's website at https://ohp.parks.ca.gov/?page_id=28066.

Note that database errors and omissions exist and will be corrected when identified and as time allows. All data values, including address information, are based upon the documentation provided to and processed by OHP, and only reflect current information that OHP has processed. Should a researcher identify discrepancies, please bring them to the attention of the respective Information Center Coordinator, so that the Information Center Coordinator may work with the OHP to resolve the issue. Some resources like those in national forests may not have exact county locations, these resources appear in each potential county's directory.

OHP produces the directories from the OTIS database as comma space value (CSV) files that will import into most tabular databases, with following information columns:

STATUS CODES

i. Background

The Office of Historic Preservation (OHP) initially created the National Register Status Codes in 1975 as a tool to classify historical resources in the state's inventory that had been identified through a regulatory process or local government survey. Implicit within the status codes was a hierarchy reflecting the level of identification, evaluation and designation to which a resource had been analyzed. The codes did not always convey the significance of the resource for purposes of the California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA).

The State Legislature enacted the California Register of Historical Resources (CRHR) in 1998. Under the provisions of that legislation, the following resources are automatically included in the California Register:

- Resources formally determined eligible for, or listed in, the National Register of Historic Places (NRHP) through federal preservation programs administered by the Office of Historic Preservation, including the National Register program; the Tax Certification program; National Historic Preservation Act Section 106

- reviews of federal undertakings;
- State Historical Landmarks (SHL) numbered 770 or higher; and
- Points of Historical Interest (PHI) recommended for listing in the California Register by the State Historical Resources Commission.

For the purposes of CEQA, resources eligible for or listed in the CRHR are, by definition, "historical resources." Additionally, resources included in or deemed eligible for a local register of historical resources, including resources given a status code 3-5 in a survey meeting OHP's requirements, are presumed to be historically or culturally significant for purposes of CEQA.

In order to simplify the identification, evaluation, and understanding of California's historic resources and better promote their recognition and preservation, the status codes have been revised to clarify CRHR and Master List submissions.

ii. Understanding the Status Codes

Users of the status codes should keep in mind that the status codes are broad indicators that in most cases serve as a starting place for further consideration and evaluations. Because the assigned status code reflects an opinion or action taken at a specific point in time, the assigned status code may not accurately reflect the resource's eligibility for the NRHP, CRHR, or local listing or later designation.

Individuals and agencies attempting to identify and evaluate historical resources need to consider the basis for evaluation upon which a particular code was assigned, i.e., date of evaluation, the reason and criteria applied for evaluation, the age of the resource at the time of evaluation, and any changes that may have been made to the resource that would impact its integrity. Keep in mind that:

- Older surveys and evaluations were biased towards architectural values (NRHP Criteria C and CRHR 3). Resources may not have been evaluated for significance for their association with important events or people or their information potential.
- Identification and evaluation of resources for Section 106 compliance does not involve evaluations for the CRHR or any local designations.
- The NRHP generally excludes resources less than fifty years old, therefore resources that were once determined ineligible for the NRHP because they were less than 50 years of age should be reevaluated for eligibility after they have aged.
- Our understanding of historical significance changes over time. There is now a greater appreciation and understanding of social and cultural history than in earlier years. Understanding of the importance of cultural landscapes and resources of the recent past is evolving as historic preservationists are grappling with how to recognize and characterize these types of resources.
